Introduction

Uproar is a coming-of-age film set in New Zealand in 1981. The story follows 17-year-old Josh Waaka, a boy who feels different and unsure about where he belongs.

Josh is half-Māori and half-European, and he lives with his mother and older brother. He attends to a strict boys’ school where rugby is everything – but Josh dreams of something else.

At the same time, there are large protests across the country because the South African rugby team is visiting. Many people are angry because South Africa still enforces apartheid – a system that separates people based on race.

As the world around him begins to change, Josh must decide: Who is he? What does he believe in? And will he stay quiet – or stand up for what he feels is right?
